Evan:

Just a quick follow up to the letter I sent, I had asked IT to do some preliminary analysis on the Million Little Pieces purchases, and they just finished that process.

Based on some preliminary analysis, they estimate about 45% of purchases were made via credit card (AND, confirmed that we would have to request contact info from the credit card companies). The remaining estimated 55% of purchases would be untraceable to a distinct customer.

They've estimated between 250 and 300 hours to pull the data and associate credit card information through our systems. When you factor in the IT salaries of (on average) between $20-$30/hour that could potentially cost upwards of $10,000, just for the analysis.
